Brief Summary of Statute §201

Prohibition Against Bribery

Prohibits a Federal employee from seeking, receiving or agreeing to accept anything of value for themselves or others in return for being influenced in an official act; being influenced to aid in the commission of a fraud on the United States; or being induced to do or omit any action in violation of official duty.

Example of violation: A Federal employee who works as an inspector for the Immigration & Naturalization Service accepted $75,000 in return for allowing smugglers to import cocaine into the US across the border with Mexico.
Ban on Representation (for compensation)

Bars employees from seeking or accepting compensation for representing or assisting someone else before the Executive Branch or the Federal courts.

Example of Violation: A Federal attorney from the Office of the Inspector General accepts pay for representing (on his personal time) his next door neighbor’s cousin in a civil case against the Department of Interior.
Ban on Representation (Even if no $$$)

Bars employees from representing another before the Executive Branch or the Federal courts in situations even where the employee does not receive any compensation.

Example of Violation: A Federal attorney from the Office of the Inspector General for no fee represents (on his personal time) his next door neighbor’s cousin in a civil case against the Department of Interior.
Post Employment – 2 Basic Prohibitions

Lifetime bar
Prohibits representing a 3rd party back to the government on a particular matter involving specific parties in which you personally and substantially participated.

2–year bar
Prohibits representing a 3rd party on matters under your official responsibility during your last year of service.

Example of violation: An IRS collection officer is assigned to two collection cases. After the IRS employee leaves the IRS, he represented both taxpayers before the IRS in connection with the collection cases to which he had been assigned as an IRS employee. (Lifetime bar)
Prohibition on Conflicting Financial Interests

Bars an employee from participating personally and substantially in an official capacity in any particular Government matter that would have a direct and predictable effect on his own financial interest or on the financial interests imputed to him.

Example of violation: An employee of USDA, who works in procurement, recommended the awarding of a contract to a company in which he owned stock.
Prohibition on Supplementation of Salary

Prohibits an employee from receiving any salary or contribution to or supplementation of salary from any source other than the U.S. as compensation for services as a Government employee.

Example of violation: A Federal scientist conducting official research on killer bee reproduction, accepts money from a private company for giving a speech on his official research.
An employee has a duty to protect and conserve Government property and shall not use such property, or allow its use, for other than authorized purposes.
Any form of real or personal property in which the Government has an ownership, leasehold, or other property interest as well as any right or other intangible interest that is purchased with Government funds, including the services of contractor personnel.
The term includes:

- Supplies
- Telephones
- Other telecommunications equipment and services
- Government mail
- Automated data processing capabilities
- Printing and reproduction facilities
- Government records
- Government vehicles
Limited Use of Government Property

An Exception to the rule:

Employees are permitted, under rules set out by the Chief Information Officer, to use Government office equipment for personal needs if the use does not interfere with official business and involves minimal additional expense to the Government.
An employee shall put forth an honest effort their performance of their official duties.

You’ve heard the saying “Put in an honest days work for an honest day’s pay.”
Using Government Property – Permissive Personal Use

Permissive use is limited to occasional personal use that does not affect the performance of your official duties. It’s not a right. It is provided at the discretion of your supervisor.
