Beginning Choosing a Good Nursing Home

- Involve your loved one in the decision-making process. This will help to build acceptance of this major change in their life and trust in you as a caregiver.

- Make a list of nursing homes close to family and friends who can visit often and can oversee your loved one’s care.

- If you are concerned about cost. Consider nursing homes that are certified for Medicare and Medicaid. Medicare does not pay for long nursing home stays.

When you visit nursing homes, look for these signs of good care:

- Dignity staff treating all residents with respect.
- Activity, residents participating in a variety of activities where they are physically active.
- Good food. Well-balanced, varied, good tasting meals served in pleasant surroundings.
- Homelike surroundings. Special signs that this is not a place to die but to live. Community activities coming into the nursing home. Organized trips to community events.
